

TOP LAWYERS

Here's who to call

Washington has lots of legal talent in every practice area. To help answer the question "Who are you going to call?" we have compiled a list of top lawyers in legal specialties that readers are most likely to need. The list includes lawyers from Rockville to Woodbridge. It includes attorneys who can help if you need a divorce, have a brother who has been arrested or a grandparent with Social Security problems, or wake up and find your name splashed across the front page of the Washington Post. Washington creates unusual legal problems. You never know when you or your employer is going to become the subject of a prosecutor's interest or a congressional hearing.

To compile this list we contacted hundreds of attorneys in each of the specialties and asked which lawyer in their field—other than themselves—they would trust with their business. Lawyers with the most recommendations made the list.

Lawyers are listed under the categories for which they are best known, but their practices are often much broader. If your situation doesn't seem to fit any of the categories given, find the one that sounds most like what you need and start calling. If you reach a lawyer who can't help you, he or she usually can refer you to someone who can.

Law firms are located in the District of Columbia except where noted.

CRIMINAL DEFENSE: I

You're Under Investigation!

You don't have to be a criminal to find yourself drawn into an awkward congressional investigation or, worse, a grand-jury inquiry by the Justice Department or the US Attorney's Office. Here are people to call.

PERSONAL INJURY

Sue the Bastards!

Personal-injury law is one of the most common fields in which ordinary citizens get involved with the judicial system. These lawyers almost always work on contingency—that is, on a percentage of the recovery—a controversial system that makes the courts accessible to ordinary people but that gives rise to criticism that the lawyers too often make as much money as the injured client.

SECURITIES

I Lost a Bundle!

A lot of legal work in Washington is generated by the staff of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Thousands of attorneys spend their days making sure the capitalist system works fairly and that the stock market does not become an insiders' playground. If you have a company under assault, or you feel a company whose stock you own has deceived you, here are the lawyers who know the SEC and securities issues best.

CIVIL RIGHTS

She Can't Play?

Whenever legislation is enacted, a body of law springs up around it. That certainly was the case with Title IX, which encourages women's sports in schools. Here are some attorneys to call if your daughter's not being allowed to play high-school football or you suspect that you've been the victim of discrimination.

WHISTLEBLOWERS

To Tell the Truth

Nothing is more discomfiting than to have to report your company or federal agency to a regulator for doing something wrong. Federal statutes encourage whistleblowing and even allow monetary rewards if your actions save the government money. It is a specialized legal practice but a necessary one if you find yourself in that situation.
